Puento Madryn, Argentina

Puerto Madryn

City in Argentina

Puerto Madryn is an Argentine city on the coast of northern Patagonia. Its sandy beaches and restaurant-lined promenade face Golfo Nuevo bay, where southern right whales breed from May to December. Ecocentro is a cliff-top museum with exhibits on Patagonian nature, and a lighthouse-style tower for ocean views. Across the bay, rocky Valdes Peninsula is home to penguins and elephant seals, which are preyed on by orcas. — Google

Our tour buses were on the pier waiting for us when we docked this morning. I decided to do a walking tour of the city on my own today. Not a very big city and it is Sunday and very little traffic. Most stores were closed but the grocery store, pharmacy and a few restaurants were open. There was even a store called Waikiki. We pay $5.90 for a box of kleenex on the ship so I stocked up while shopping today. Clean City and Friendly people.
